

Biggar Lockdown Life

Social History Project

There must be few safer or more caring places than Biggar to live in during this pandemic. We also recognise that there are many personal stories which, taken together, will provide a picture for the future of what it was like during this grim period of world history.

Biggar Community Action Group wants to record the Biggar Coronavirus experience for the future. To this end, we plan to interview people of all ages, of different life styles and occupations, in all parts of the town. This will be done by interview either by telephone, online or, if possible, face-to-face.

If you hear from one of us, it will be because you have been selected as representative of one or more of these. Better still, you could contact the Biggar Community Action Group if you have a particular story to tell or you simply need to talk about it. If you would like to volunteer a special story, or know someone who you believe has a story to tell, just contact:

Jan Currie at biggarcag@gmail.com

Helen Barrington, the local photographer, is part of the team and hopes to photograph many of the people who volunteer information. Think how valuable such a resource will be to future historians.

While Biggar is not THE centre of the universe and has barely had any experience of Covid 19, it is still OUR centre of the universe and part of the big picture. We hope you share our conviction that this is a project worth supporting.

We look forward to hearing from you.
